The home of the elephant is the wide shady forest. The elephant is the largest of all animals, and it is found in Asia and Africa. One of the places in Asia where the elephant can be found is the island of Ceylon. Ceylon has huge forests, and thousands of elephants live there. These forests are so thick with trees that the sun never reaches the ground.

Elephants like the cool dark places in the forests. They stand there, moving their big ears trying to get rid of the flies, which settle on them. They like the coolness of water, too. They stand in a pool of water for hours sucking up water with their trunks and splashing it over their bodies. Although they eat fruit and the tender leaves of the plants and trees of the forests, they sometimes damage the Ceylonese crops when they come out of the forests and eat the rice and corn growing in the fields and break down the garden fence and what is growing in the garden.

The oldest elephant always leads when they move about in herds. The baby elephants and mothers walk in the middle, where they are safe. They make a great noise when they are moving in herds, bending back and breaking the trees which get in their ways. Although an elephant is usually quiet and harmless no other animal dares attack the herd when it is moving.
