VI- Reading Comprehension (20M)

نموذج الإجابة

Read the following passage, then answer the questions below:

Sometimes it seems that no one likes tea quite as much as the British do. But in fact, tea is popular in countries around the world, and many different rituals and customs for drinking tea have developed over the centuries.

In China, tea had been considered a cure for many illnesses. It was always served with much ceremony. When the Chinese first started drinking tea, they didn't use teapots. Instead, they put tea leaves and hot water into a small bowl with a cover. In Japan, a strict ritual was set down by the first tea master, Shuko . Guests must wash their hands and faces and remove their shoes before entering the tearoom through a low doorway that forces them to bend and appear humble. The British also like to be formal when they serve it.

Many interesting tea customs have been developed in different countries. In India , for example, you might drink tea with milk, sugar and cinnamon. In Thailand , people chew tea leaves with salt and other spices. In Iran , perfumed tea is made by leaving flowers or herbs in tea containers. In Morocco, tea is prepared in a silver teapot then sugar and mint are added.

Regardless of where or how tea is prepared and served , many people consider it to be an important part of their social life. Having a cup of tea provides a reason for getting together and sharing a moment of conversation.
